

As the 21st century marches on, each year with its own set of accumulating conflicts and developments, the world grows harder to recognize. This fragmented connection with the place we call home is a reality I refuse to participate in. I believe that grief can be comforted by creation. I believe that the broken pieces of our reality can be mended—rebuilt—from the glue that is community. But it can only happen if we actively choose to come together.

This is a website for you to rest, gain inspiration from accessible resources, fill up your cup, and connect with others who share your values. This is not a product or even a service. This is a space.

This space is an anti-capitalist endeavor. I want to return to a slow and intentional way of experiencing the internet. One that refuses the notion of mindless consuming. One without ads, corporate interests, commercial censorship, algorithmic slop, or AI.

This space will have curated content made by me, with the intention of encouraging you to reconnect with your body, your community, and the planet.

Body:

- Tap back into creativity without needing to have a polished product at the end of it.
- Transform your worries into motivation by daring to imagine a better world and building meaningful experiences.

Community:

- Become a “villager” through shared food, crafts, and diverse forms of expression.
- Feel safer in this world knowing someone on your block knows your name.

Planet:

- Integrate intersectional and environmental practices into your work, from the ground up.
- Grow a greater understanding of how you fit into the bigger picture by participating in a movement greater than your own interests.

Here, you're free to linger. Roam this space until something catches your eye. Let your feelings collide with inspiration and let it spark a fire that courses through your veins. I want you to reclaim your life in the midst of turmoil, and to cherish the joy that follows. I want you to leave this space with a sense that everything is going to be okay.